

Affective Sustainability

Redesigning Everyday Practices

Sustainable Design Philosophy Symposium #2

Tishman Environment and Design Center
Level 5 72 5th Ave NYC

10:30am – 12pm Thursday January 22nd, 2009

Even though we know we should, and even though we feel we should, we are not, for the most part, changing our everyday practices to live more sustainably.

Have those promoting more sustainable lifestyles an adequate understanding of what it means to be human? What ontology of human existence is needed to explain how people come to reorganize their expectations and habits?

A paper by

Bruin Carleton Christensen

Philosophy, Australian National University

Respondents:

Jay Bernstein

Philosophy, New School for Social Research

Rachel Heiman

Anthropology, New School for Social Research

Harvey Molotch

Sociology, New York University

For further information contact:

Cameron Tonkinwise School of Design Strategies – tonkinwc@newschool.edu